

Role and Interest of Indian Political Parties in Coalition Politics: With Particular Reference of Bihar.

Ranjit Kumar Bhartiya

The purpose of the present study is to see how political parties have kept an active role in the formation of government and most likely their Regional Parties have kept a very vital role for the formation of government in the centre and state also. Because of that without the help of any Regional Parties, there could never be a strong and durable government in the centre. Previous data shows that many times regional parties had withdrawn their support then the centre government came in a minority and parliament had been dissolved, same as in the matter of Bihar also. The aim of this article is that the interest for the benefit of the Regional Party should be reduced for the development of the country and state also because political parties are the backbone of society so there should be strong political parties. Political parties are the backbone of society so there should be a strong and stable government in India and state also.
