Age Sex composition not only acts as a determinant of population growth. It also reflects the effects of birth, death and migration of the population in any region preponderance of male population in urban areas, leading to lower sex ratio also describes about the high degree of migration from rural to urban areas. Infect age structure and sex compositions have much more importance than marital status. Economic and social activities and cultural planning may not be carried out successfully without the consideration of age and sex composition. Thus the age – sex structure is potentially a very powerful planning tool.
