

A geographical analysis of Social Well-being in Bihar

Dr. Sanjeev Kumar

Social well-being is a state of affairs where the basic needs of the populace are met. The concept of social well-being and other welfare approaches have been recognized in the literature for many years but this particular field of study has been left relatively unexplored in India for long time. The present study investigates the level of social well-being considering parameters within two broader subgroups of income and education, and accident and crime in Bihar. Quantitative methodology was adopted for analysis of secondary data that ultimately delineated the required findings. Results derived from the study portrayed mixed and varied level of inter-district social well-being in regard to both the broader subgroups of dimensions selected for the study. Present status of Bihar highly solicits such studies of well-being across different parameters.
