

Impact Of Television And Outdoor Games On Children's General Intelligence

Sanjay Kumar

An attempt was made to find out the effect of watching television and playing outdoor games on respondents general intelligence. For this purpose General Intelligence Test by S.M. Mohsin (1983) was administered to the respondents of television watcher group and sportsman group. Outdoor games require team work in the pursuit of mutual goals to achieve success. Thus young people learn to recognize and value the unique and important contribution of their diverse teammates. According to Jomills Braddock (1998) 'We are finding that individual students who participated in sports are less likely to be hostile or antagonistic towards other students regardless of their race or ethnicity.
